Ray Shipman, Class of 2008, Drafted with the New Orleans Saints

Ray Shipman, Monsignor Edward Pace High School class of 2008, was drafted to the New Orleans Saints in the 2013 NFL draft. While at Pace High, Ray received numerous awards and honors as an all-star basketball player, and he spent two years of his college career as a point guard for the Florida Gators. But life had other plans for Ray. He would soon become a linebacker for the UCF Knights football team. According to an interview with Scott Porter from New Era Scouting, Ray credits basketball with making him "more of a fighter" (newerascouting.com). He always envisioned life as a professional football player, and now his dreams can be realized.

Kayvon Webster, Class of 2009, Drafted to NFL Broncos

Kayvon Webster, Monsignor Edward Pace High School class of 2009, was just drafted to join the NFL's Denver Broncos. Kayvon, known at Pace High as an all-around great student and athlete, pursued his football career at the University of South Florida. While the team may not have had the best season in 2012, Kayvon impressed coaches and executives with his personal records. Described as being an extremely physical and aggressive cornerback in his college career, Justin Onslow in "The Bleacher Report" states, "the foundation is definitely there for Webster to be a quality NFL defensive back." The Pace High community is eager to follow Kayvon's professional career as a Denver Bronco.
